Ancient Stone Monuments

A witness to creation

Chichén-Itzá pyramid, Mexico

On the spring equinox, tourists and locals gather at the Chichén-Itzá pyramid in Southern Mexico.

As the sun sets in the afternoon, it casts a shadow on the northern staircase that lines up with a carving of a snake's head on the bottom of the stairwell, giving the impression that a snake is slithering down the pyramid.

This is likely to represent the plumed serpent god Kukulcán or Quetzalcóatl coming down to Earth on that day.

On the spring equinox, the sun rises exactly on the central peak of the temple in Cambodia called Angkor Wat.

The building leads into a 700-year old city made up of canals, temples, shrines, and tombs spread over 154 square miles, in the jungle of northern Cambodia.
